·The company informs the CNMC of the closure of all its copper central offices as part of the fixed network transformation plan.

·Fiber, which is faster, safer and more stable than copper, reduces the environmental impact of the operator's fixed network in Spain by 94%.

·“Telefónica continues to make progress in its transformation to maintain its leadership. The new digital era flows through our networks. The closure of our last copper central offices was another of Telefónica's commitments, and Telefónica always fulfils its commitments and is prepared for the future,” says José María Álvarez-Pallete, Chairman of Telefónica.
