Telefónica Tech, Telefónica's digital business unit, today announced the expansion of its strategic partnership with CrowdStrike to deliver CrowdStrike Falcon® Next-Gen SIEM technology in its NextDefense XDR managed security service.

NextDefense XDR service enables Telefónica Tech to detect and respond to customer threats across environments (including endpoint, identity, cloud and data) from its global network of Security Operations Centers (SOCs).

With the addition of Crowdstrike's Falcon Next-Gen SIEM capabilities, Telefónica Tech enhances its SOCs with real-time analytics and artificial intelligence-based automation, providing unified visibility, real-time detection, accelerated investigations and greater efficiency.

Telefónica Tech and CrowdStrike are developing managed security services, combining human expertise, AI-native technology, and global scale to transform how SOCs operate and stop breaches.

David López Meco, Head of Cybersecurity Products & Services at Telefónica Tech, said:

> The expansion of our collaboration with CrowdStrike reflects our commitment to the security of our customers. Combining the advanced capabilities of CrowdStrike's Next-Gen SIEM with our global SOC expertise, we offer organizations enhanced protection against modern cyber threats, while optimizing their security operations.

Daniel Bernard, chief business officer at CrowdStrike, said:

Telefónica Tech is evolving how customers manage and respond to threats with NextDefense XDR. By building on the power of Falcon Next-Gen SIEM, they're giving organizations the speed, automation, and intelligence they need to stay ahead of modern attacks. Together, we're helping customers strengthen their defenses and focus on driving their business forward.
