One hundred days of war has put Ukraine's health system under severe pressure

PUBLISHED JUN 3, 2022
BY WORLD HEALTH ORGANIZATION

After one hundred days of war, Ukraine's health system is under severe pressure and the World Health Organization (WHO) has increased its presence, both in Ukraine and in those countries hosting displaced Ukrainians, to help meet the escalating health needs.

""This war has gone on for 100 days too many, shattering lives and communities, and imperilling the short- and long-term health of Ukraine's people," said Dr Tedros Adhanom Ghebreyesus, WHO Director-General. "WHO is doing everything we can to support Ukraine's Ministry of Health and deliver essential medical supplies and equipment. But the one medicine that Ukraine needs most is the one that WHO can't deliver – peace. We call on the Russian Federation to end the war."
